By Marvin Cox ACP Correspondent

Interior Ickes, sounding off in Chicago last week to the effect that colleges do not prepare students for social and political responsibility, arouses a long dormant idea of your correspondent.

This writer is neither an educator Vol. XIII nor an educator's son, so he had, perhaps, better tread softly about academic suggestions. However, SESQUICENTENNIAL AND GEORGIA state university and a law school, he does make bold to suggest the following as a means toward stimulating students in an interest in citizenship

MANSION OPEN

FOR VISITORS

Every student of GSCW is invited to visit this historic building on one of these days; the faculty members are invited also. Having studied about the Mansion, its history before and after the War Between the States, and with the celebration of her 100th birthday at hand, it will be most intriguing to walk about the big rooms, see where the old salon will be restored, and picture in one's mind the brilliant appearance of this huge room during one of the Governor's balls. Each student will doubtless feel great pride in the fact that this historic shrine is connected with her own college,
