A Word To The Wise

The spirit of GSC. Is there such a thing? There should be, because spirit is important at GSC. It is more than that—it is necessary.

Necessary, because without interest and enthusiasm, nothing can be as good as it should be. We need spirit in our major organizations, in class, in elections, in Golden Slipper, in play, in everything, because these things are important to us in our daily life, and we want to make them more than just worthwhile.

All of these add up to one thing—our life in our school. We have a good school, and it's up to us to make it a better one.

How can we do this if we are not interested in GSC? But how can we help but be interested when we realize that we are a part of the school, and that, at present, the school is a part of us. When we realize this, we must have interest. But what about enthusiasm?

Enthusiasm is a showing of interest. We show our interest and prove our spirit when we vote, when we attend class and student body meetings, when we go to Student Council, when we go to Play Night, and when we write letters to the editor, or do any of the numerous things that we can do to support our school.

Remember the song that ends with "You will love GSC by and by"? If we really love our college, we will show it—with interest, enthusiasm, and spirit! The spirit of GSC!

Times Have Changed

Not too long ago college was thought of as a place which was always gay, carefree, and amusing even if slightly insane at times. College life was considered to be rather aloof from the rest of the world and somehow campus problems just weren't like problems elsewhere in the world.

But somewhere along the way things changed. Somewhere along the way all young people have come to be looked on in a different light—not as kids who were cute at times and who if they had any gray matter just didn't use it. Today young people may hold the key to a world of peace or a world at war.

How absurd? Yes it's true that very few of our generation hold offices in the state department where our foreign policy unfolds, but we do have a definite place in the world today. We're part of an ever-growing college population and the very fact holds some significance for us. If that population is large enough to cause presidential candidates to speak to colleges all over the nation, if that population is large enough to cause straw votes all over the country to be cast to see which candidate students prefer, then the student population must be pretty important.

Today students are asked to attend state and national political conventions. The Democratic party is reserving a section in its convention hall in Philadelphia for youth delegates. Students today are studying through first-hand experience industry and politics. Students are going abroad to meet other students and their problems. Students are going abroad to study and students from other countries are coming to America for the same reason.

Sure, it's encouraging that things have taken this trend, but with these new ideas have come new ideas for responsibility on the part of students. It may have been a little irritating to be considered brainless, but it was easier. Now we are confronted with big problems that we know will directly influence us—the atomic bomb, UMT, relations with Russia. Sooner or later we're going to have to face those facts.

But will we assume such a responsibility or will we climb back into our old nook and ignore the rest of the world?

The Question Was Answered

In the last issue of The Colonnaide, there was an editorial called "A Question For You." This editorial defended the students' chapel conduct, but added that perhaps we were just overly optimistic. We said, "Maybe we won't listen to any sort of chapel speaker unless his whole program is filled with jokes."

Now we have reason to believe that what was said in defense of the students was true, at least in part. Last week when the Rev. John Stanley Grauel spoke on the Palestine issue, the entire audience was so quiet and well-behaved that you could have heard the proverbial pin drop. We'd like to say thanks for such an interesting speaker, and thanks to the students for such good conduct.

In another past issue, a comment was made on the need of new signs, or repainted ones, to mark such busy spots as the bursar's office or the personnel office. These markers have been gotten, and are now gracing the doors of many offices which needed them. The new signs are a very attractive improvement.

Students And Chapel Programs

We understand that discussions are underway now about more student participation in chapel programs. The proposed plan as we understand it is to let students have charge of the Monday chapel programs.

The plan if followed could mean many things. It could mean programs given by the music department, one-act plays given by the speech department, and other interesting programs could be given by the other departments.

It could mean more programs for CGA, Y, and Rec. It could mean more programs by other organizations and clubs on campus. It could also mean the continuation of outside speakers who could speak on things students are interested in.

Thus we could have more student participation in chapel programs, and then, too, it could make for a better chapel spirit. After all if we plan the programs we'll be more interested in them, we'll know the kind of speakers we want and we can't complain too much if things don't turn out exactly as we expected.

The Star-Crossed Crab Apples

By CAROL JONES

Come closer, little Jessie, for I'm going to tell you a story. This story is going to be different—it's going to be a surprise story, so sit back, dear Jessie, and listen to my tale of the two star-crossed crab apples.

Once upon a time there were two crab apples who lived on a tree. They were young crab apples, and he was handsome and she was lovely. They hung close together on the same branch and spent their time smiling and blushing at each other.

Then one day he finally gathered up enough courage to speak to her. "Did you vote today?" he shouted, meaning only to remind her.

She hadn't voted, and she was so shaken by his question that she fell to the mud below, and was gobbled up by an old horse who came along. The old horse fell violently ill as soon as he arrived at home, and his wife put him to stall, but he died anyway.

The other crabapple was very sorry, but he turned around and found another girl crabapple on his other side, so he asked her how about stepping out tonight. She said okay so they went to Play Night and had a fine time and stopped by the Student Union on their way home.

Later as they hung by their stems in the moonlight he proposed. She said they she would accept on one condition; she would ask him a question and he must answer it truthfully. He agreed, so she asked, "Did you vote today?" He turned red, because he remembered that while he was reminding others, he himself, hadn't voted. He was so shaken by her question that he fell to the mud below and was gobbled up by the old horse's wife. She fell violently ill as soon as she arrived at home and as there was no one to put her to stall, she died immediately.

The third crab apple hung daintily from her stem, quite happy in the knowledge that she had voted. Later she married another crab apple who voted and soon they had bushels of little crab apple buds, and lived happily ever after.

Jessies Relate Their Trials And Their Many Tribulations

Jessie tripped merrily down the hall and opened the door to her room, where she stopped in horror. No, it wasn't a dead body, but it was a live one. Of all things, there sat Cleo Clodenhimer in the middle of the floor.

Cleo arose from her uncomfortable position and as she did there was a tremendous clatter. Cleo had been sitting perilously close to a stack of records which had been carefully arranged under the dresser, under the desk and the most artistic pattern of all had records with blue labels and red labels and yellow labels arranged around the floor as stepping stones.

Cleo seeing Jessie's face suddenly remembered an appointment at the dentist's and departed. Jessie stood in the middle of the wreckage and moaned. "There went my Clabber Dance and She's her Own Second Cousin Once Removed by Marriage," Jessie wept and looked in the mirror to see if she could cry as prettily as Lana Turner.

Jessie's roommate entered and she was indeed horrified to discover a strange creature in her room covered with Stardust. But when she discovered it was really Jessie, she was even more horrified. Jessie explained the situation, and Roommate cried out meanwhile looking in the mirror to see if she resembled Jane Russell.

Biology Course Inspires Ideas For Long Awaited Summer Vacation

Summer is almost here, and if you haven't planned your vacation yet, you'd better not dally any longer. Hurry, now, pick up your biology book and start reading tomorrow's assignment. There's sure to be something there to inspire thinking of some nature.

There! Now that you've read a few paragraphs, you should be able to get a good start. Do you think the great out-of-doors with the birds and bears and beavers sound related to biology? Why, it certainly does—for how are you going to camp along the banks of the river without knowing some of your woodland neighbors?

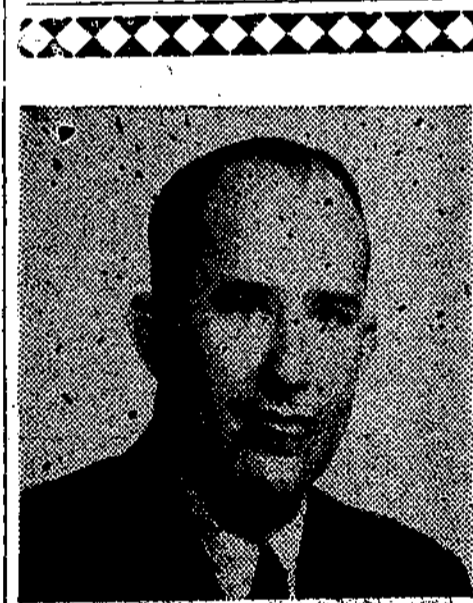

You've probably gotten a good start now, so you can lay the book aside and I'm sure your ideas will flow like wine. Perhaps you've considered the beach. Remember that week last summer—maybe you'd enjoy a whole month! But, no! Let's do something different, New York sounds good: night clubs and Broadway.

Yes, New York is a good place to spend the summer. Many of your friends have been there; so many, in fact, that your summer would just be a drop in the bucket.

No, that's no good. Getting back to biology, you can think of something better. Hmmm—movie, they were served hot dogs in the Sanford court. Friday night at 10 o'clock, seniors entertained members of the junior class at a very informal gathering on Sanford side lawn. The juniors were given a personal escort to the party by the seniors, and were presented with the key to Sanford.

Senior Week was brought to a close, Saturday, May 15, with the junior-senior dance. Members of both classes and their dates danced to the music of Jesse Duckworth and his orchestra from Macon.

Arnold Parker, Says:

I especially appreciate the patronage of those who "Cleaned With Us"—and hope more of you will do so next term. If you have winter clothes you would like to have stored until you return, bring them to us—PLEASE H.A.M! This being the last issue for this school year—I would like to say of this time that we are glad to have had you ladies come to Milledgeville to school, and hope each of you (who does not finish) will return this fall—planning to complete your college courses at GSCW.

GSCW was one of the eight schools in the nation chosen to receive a scholarship to this workshop.
