Journalism Class Helps Edit Macon Telegraph

The Journalism class of the George Washington University of Macon visited the gaits of the Macon Telegraph Monday, December 1st, in order to help edit the Tuesday morning paper. The class members were late in arrival at 1 o'clock in a special bus chartered by the school and arrived in Macon at 1:30 after enjoying en route a plate lunch prepared by Mrs. Z. M. Hall and Miss Ellis Purish. Immediately on arrival assignments were made by the city editor. Mr. Mitchell, for both afternoon and night duties. Several girls went with the reporters on their beats, others covered beats themselves, while others covered the various plays, banquets, and socials occurring that afternoon and night. 1949-1950 the students saw the first edition of the paper come from the press and then they began to appreciate the work of a newspaper. At midnight the class were the house guests at a banquet at the Parman House, asked by the staff of the Telegraph. The staff was introduced by Mr. Mark Riberidge, the managing editor of the paper, while the girls were introduced by Miss Elizabeth Milhikis, the only girl in the banquet. The class reluctantly gave up the speech of appreciation on behalf of the class. After which the class returned home and entered the bus to return to the campus.

Dr. Wynon is quoted as saying "The Journalism class did well in Macon and I am proud of them, while all the members declared that it was great to be a newspaper.

The members of the class are: Norma Dunaway, Americans; Mary Belle Giffen and Marguerite Arthur Quinlan; Virginia Maughan, Greenville; Nina Juan Hines, Hether; Joanne John Carver, Georgia Tenn.; Margaret Trappell, Newman; Elizabeth Milhikis, Jesse; Pansy Wortham, Roswell; Marion Jones and Emily Sanders, Atlanta; Marion Powell, Woodstock; Anna R.
