The Colonnade

Milledgeville, Georgia

In 1828 the Georgia state legislature voted to transfer the capital of the state from Washington to Milledgeville, a town on the Oconee River in Baldwin County. The legislature had been elected after the War of 1812, a period of rapid growth and development in Georgia.

The site was selected under the leadership of John Milledge, a key figure in the state's development. The decision was made to move the capital because of the town's central location and its strategic position on the Oconee River.

John Milledge, known as the "Father of the State," was a prominent figure in Georgia's political history. He served as the governor of Georgia for 18 years and was instrumental in the state's growth and development.

The change of capital to Milledgeville was a significant event in Georgia's history, as it marked the beginning of a new chapter in the state's political and cultural life. The move to Milledgeville was also a reflection of the state's growing sense of identity and pride, as it sought to establish its own distinct character and traditions.

The town of Milledgeville has a rich history and offers a glimpse into Georgia's past. It is a place where history and culture come together to create a unique and engaging atmosphere for visitors and residents alike.
