Dr. Taylor Speaks On Education

G. S. C. W. DEAN GIVES TALK ON MONDAY TO BEGIN "THE TEACHING PROGRAM SERIES"

"The joy of learning, the challenge from concept to concept is the earnest answer to "What is education?" established by Dr. Taylor in his address on "Objectives of Education given Monday morning at the G. S. C. W. chapel. This was the first of a series of programs sponsored by the Education Club to stimulate students in the education work of the college.

Dr. Taylor said that many people are trying to secure an education realized simply about the acquisition of a certain degree. He never found. During the Middle Ages an "abstract of the right of a "What is education?" was answered religiously. "An education was a preparation for eternity.

Dr. Taylor stated that in the United States until the War between the States, education was for the aristocrats. The idea was that only lords ought to be educated. He believed that all people should belong to education but some who might belong be educated. He believed that all people should belong to education but some who might belong be educated.

How the age of machines brought about the need of more vocational training was explained.

Fashion Show To Be Given on Tuesday

Miss Catherine Elaine Cleveford of the Cotton-Twill Institute of New York will be a guest speaker on the home economics department on December 12 and 15 and will present a style show at the department's weekly meeting.

Techniques of Study

By DR. B. MEADOWS

Experimental evidence on the psychology of study justifies the following procedures:

1. PLACE AND TIME FOR STUDY IMPORTANT. One should study at a special place and at a fixed time for study. Dr. Meadows suggests that one should form the habit of beginning his study at a designated time regardless of previous engagements.

2. ACCORDING TO COCOANUTS. According to Cocoanuts, A., and other authorities, the psychology of study requires rest from external work, rather than that near, since the external work of rest is the direct cause of more rest for the mental powers.

3. DURATION AND LENGTH OF STUDY PERIODS IMPORTANT. One should have an established six-hour period per week for studying, classification, and analysis. Two hours of this period should be devoted to the study of each subject for forty-five minutes each day. In each subject, the thirty-minute practice period would be devoted to greater repetitions per unit of time than longer or shorter lessons for various subdivisions of the subject.

Dr. Meadows' new book will be issued soon.

Another book will be added to the long list of literature prepared for the study of the American Working Man. Dr. W. T. Wynn, publisher of the "Worshipper," has written a book in this line, "The Worshipper in the Study House," which is to be "handsome and almost ready for the best shelves."

The volume contains all of the works of Dr. Wynn, and is published for the study of the American Working Man. The book is a "handsome affair" and is written for the best shelves.

Dr. Wynn will attend Emory celebration
