Sally Shopper

You know, getting on that old train, "Hello, Mr. Whites," and taking a trip with those who want to admire the scenery and the art of American life in the South. On the way back, the conductor comes by and says, "Hello, Mr. Whites," and you say, "Good morning, Mr. Shopper." You can tell he's getting paid, too.

What College Students Like in Teachers

Qualities which college students admire in their teachers are: the ability to explain things clearly, the sense of humor, the ability to make the subject matter interesting, and the ability to inspire confidence in the students. These qualities are not exclusive to college students, as high school students also admire the same qualities in their teachers.
