Washington, D.C. — On the campus of George Washington University, student members and foreign dignitaries gathered yesterday for the dedication of three Great Presidents to the City of Washington. These three presidents, along with various other personalities were on hand to give their support and encouragement to the cause of the immortal institution.

Three years ago, the University of George Washington was dedicated in the presence of President Woodrow Wilson. Since then, the school has continued to make progress and today, it is one of the most respected institutions in the country.

The dedication ceremony was held at the entrance of the university, where a group of distinguished guests was present. Among the guests were members of the university faculty, students, and representatives of other educational institutions.

The dedication speech was delivered by President Wilson himself. He spoke about the importance of education and the need for continued progress. The guests were moved by his words and his speech was met with applause and cheers.

The ceremony was also attended by various dignitaries, including members of Congress and representatives of the federal government.

In conclusion, the dedication ceremony was a momentous occasion for the university and its students. It marked a new chapter in the history of the institution and a new era of progress for the school.

FLORENCE LERNER COMMENTS ON NEW YORK PLAYS

In a letter from Florence Lerner of New York, the popular publisher of the New York stage has given her views on the plays.

"The New York theatre, the Broadway theatre as it is called, is slowly but surely making its way. It is not so long ago that the New York theatre was considered as an inferior theatre. But now, with the advent of new directors and new playwrights, the theatre is becoming more popular and more respected."
