THESE PEOPLE MAKE NEWS

What with all the trees that the campus has had during the quarter, insignificant though they were, and with fire drills constantly going on in the dormitories—usually around 1 a.m., the reporter naturally had the subject on her mind. Looking around for one of those calm, cool, and collected people who would know exactly what to do in case of fire, the reporter saw Evelyn Gilroy.

"At least she photographs well," we thought, as we asked him what she would grab in case of fire.

"I believe I'd grab my bedroom slippers, my favorite ones!" We think Evelyn would look attractively cute doing a Lady Godiva in her bedroom slippers, but what would she grab in case of fire?

Perhaps it is the weather that has dampened Tasha Moshkin's ardor for the good old USA, but anyway her decided promptness (that is, when she finally se- similated the idea of mailing any $5,000 down a rich uncle or what have you) that she would take the matter and head West to Murphy's straight for Rome (to visit her relatives there), "I wouldn't overlook my relatives in Africa either," she added. "Anyway, my one ambition has always been to take a leisurely trip around the world."

"What do I think of women proposing? Why I think it a man is that hard to get, get him that way," answered Winona Murphy, proving that there's a will there's a way. "However I don't think I'd go that far in an effort to have a meal ticket. As we agreed with her, she added, "I don't know though, 1940 is Leap Year, isn't it."

Adams, McConnell, Cannon 1939-40 Class Presidents

Betty Adams, Jean McConnell, and Frances Cannon were elected to the presidency of the 1939-40 Senior, Junior, and Sophomore classes respectively in the class primaries Wednesday. The presidential election was decided, giving the winning candidates large vote margins in each case.

Betty Adams defeated Susan Ferguson by a margin of 50 votes in the race for the presidency of the senior class of 1940-41. There was a run-over between Evelyn Veal and Katherine Kricklind for the position of vice-president, both candidates receiving 58 votes. The final election was scheduled for March 3.

The Editor Comments...

Some of the mail is the usual variety of criticism and advise. But last week we received a letter from a student who was feeling very discouraged about the future. He wrote:

"I have been struggling with the problem of what to do with my life. I feel like I haven't found my true calling yet. I've tried different things, but nothing seems to stick. I'm not sure what direction to take."

We understand where he's coming from. It's a common feeling among college students. But here's some advice we can offer:

1. Take time to reflect on your interests and passions. What do you enjoy doing? What makes you feel fulfilled?
2. Don't be afraid to try new things. You may discover a hidden talent or interest.
3. Network with others who are pursuing similar goals. You can learn a lot from their experiences.
4. Seek out mentors or advisors who can offer guidance and support.

Remember, finding your path takes time. Keep exploring and don't give up. We're here to support you every step of the way.

"Boar News for a lovely evening," —the G.S. G.W. Student who has been seen strolling the streets and munching on chips.

This situation continues to exist outside of the campus, and inside it as it is more intense. The problem is not one of food, but rather one of education. It seems to be spreading to the entire student body. The college administration is aware of the situation and is working to address it. We encourage all students to take an active role in solving this problem.

Letter To The Editor

Dear Editor—

I would like to express my concern about the current state of the college. The student body is feeling very disheartened and I believe something needs to be done.

Sincerely,

"Shift-All-Trade"

That's the name of the new club that has recently been formed on campus. It's a group of students who are interested in exploring different career paths.

"The idea is to give students a chance to try out different careers without having to commit to one," said President Bette Donaldson. "It's a great way to discover what you're passionate about."

Pitt Class Trains Retailers

A new type of business education—the training of graduate students in retail sales practices and methods—is being inaugurated at the University of Pittsburgh this fall. The first authorization of 20 students has been given by the University of Pittsburgh, and a number of larger institutions have also expressed interest.

The course is designed to give students practical experience in the retail business, and to help them develop the knowledge and skills necessary for success in the field. Students will work in various retail stores in the Pittsburgh area, learning about sales techniques, customer service, and the fundamentals of the retail business.

The University of Pittsburgh is one of the nation's leading institutions of higher education, and it is dedicated to providing a high-quality education to its students. The University offers a wide range of programs and courses, and it is committed to preparing students for success in their chosen fields.

Education On Horseback

Increasingly, college students are turning to equestrian activities as a way to relieve stress and improve their overall well-being. The University of Pittsburgh has recognized this trend and has added a new class on horseback riding to its curriculum.

The class is designed to help students develop their riding skills and to teach them about the importance of taking care of their horses. Students will learn how to mount and dismount their horses, how to groom and exercise them, and how to communicate effectively with their horses.

Champion horse veterans of the University of Pittsburgh campus are Keenan and his wife, who own four horses and two ponies. The couple has been involved in equestrian activities for many years, and they are happy to share their knowledge and expertise with the college community.

Jeanne Wasser's Leading "Student Shopper!"

At a recent event, a fashion style creator wore clothing from a student at Ohio State University's costume design course—be sure to see the results of this fashion show. Jeanne Wasser, a fashion designer, arranged a fashion show of her students' work, emphasizing the creativity and talent of the students. The audience was impressed by the variety of styles, from classic to avant-garde, and the designers' ability to create garments that were both innovative and wearable. Wasser's vision for her students is to encourage them to push the boundaries of fashion and express their unique styles. The event was a successful showcase of the students' skills and their potential in the fashion industry.

Fashion Clinic Aids the Dress-Conscious

An experimental program going "right for keeps" touched a broad area designed "Right for Keeps". The program's purpose is to educate the public about the importance of proper attires and etiquette. The program included demonstrations on how to dress properly, etiquette tips, and general advice on how to feel and look confident in any situation. The goal of the program is to encourage individuals to take pride in their appearance and to promote a positive image. The program was well-received, and participants praised the organizers for their efforts to improve the community's overall fashion sense.

G. S. C. W. Band
Gives Its Second Chapel Concert
The G. S. C. W. band, under the direction of Mr. Charles Madsen, made its recent appearance of the year here Thursday morning at the Assembly Exercises.

The band presented the following program March, Benedict; Ave Maria, Mozart; Merry Peasant (displaying trombone and bass section of the band), Schumann; Military Salute, Bach; March of the Priests and Angels and Cherubs (from "The Magic Flute," by Mozart); Amuroh (originally from "Die Meistersinger," by Wagner) and Ambition Overturns, Bennett.

There may or there may not be an actual party split at the next election, but it seems certain enough that the two parties cannot forever continue to exist in their present form, with such irreparable differences of opinion within, over such a fundamental issue. Whether either side can become strong enough to form a third party or not is problematical; what is far more likely to result, since the members of the anti-finance capitalistic wing of the government group is apparently outnumbered on the important commission and probably in Congress itself is that it will eventually become a bloc, swinging to either side as it sees things which may agree with its point of view. The Democrats as a traditional party may win the next election, but they cannot win it without the New Deal help. The Republicans may win, in which case the party split will be much more easily accomplished. The task of the insurgent Democratic bloc will then be to correct enough members of the old Republican party leadership for a split, to enable it, with its ideas to triumph over
