"Trained Minds, Greatest Asset," Carmichael Says

"Trained minds is the state's greatest asset," graduated chairman James V. Carmichael laid a large, enthusiastic group of student delegates from classes and universities from all parts of Georgia in his address to the student rally in Athens last Friday. He spoke to his many youthful followers from a platform erected in front of buildings at the University of Georgia, traffic having been blocked to provide standing room for students and others who had assembled.

Buddy Paige, leader of the Carmichael followers at Tech, and editor of the Technique, presented the candidate with a campaign hat from the students.

Frank W. Welker, president of the Student League for Good Government, and socio-economist Dr. John F. California College Press Association, welcomed all visiting students. Representatives from other schools gave brief addresses, Janet Fowler having spoken for GSCW.

Mr. Carmichael stated that his life had been dedicated to the building of a successful business and a happy home with his wife and little girl—out to becoming governor. But when the people of his "field" were left with a choice of between four more years of Ligon, "red mud and mud," the black hue tie, he could not refuse to offer a candidate whose past life had not had political stain attached to it. He continued that his record would not be looked into successfully because he will be, he declared, "for the know lest I don't know and I hope I never know.

This student, no mayoral, favorable discharge bulletins or talk in uniform, dressed as Mr. Carmichael demanded before granting moral facilities and instead of "a junior college on every corner." The mail Bid, which would make available favorable essentials for students for their education, and who were responsible educational facilities, has already been endorsed by this candidate, who has already written Senators George and Russell to this effect, declaring that the state could not wait for him to become governor before action was taken.

Talmadge has charged that Carmichael's supporters are composed of "the power brokers," who interpret to mean those who were found in their campaigns for the governor's chair, and is accused of having played dirty during the campaign, and having used his money in the campaign, and has been working constantly to improve their street. Mr. Carmichael has been among these. He feels deeply troubled in Georgia and wants to return something to it through his service.

"If I am elected governor with the support of this group state senator, my conscience would never let me do anything wrong, even if I wanted to," he again declared himself to clean government and an honest campaign, and that the group is not playing dirty in the campaign, and is working hard through brokers to realize the best interest of Georgia. Following the advice of James V. Carmichael, students at GSCW who desire to send delegations to the chapel for discussion and reports of their individual campaign efforts, Buddy Paige of Georgia Tech, president of a large body, he stated that the aim of each campaign should be to get people interested in the governor's race, and to get the polls.

"All our efforts will be in vain," he said, "if an election day, those who fail to show up at the polls."
