The WAYWARD BUS
BY JOHN STEINBECK

Reviewed by Suzanne Lenker
From the author of "Cannery Row," "Travels with Charley," and "The Moon is Down," comes a story of a group of people who move from place to place in a bus, seeking adventure and new experiences. The characters encounter various landscapes and cultures, each offering a unique perspective on life.

On the wayward bus, you will meet the warm-hearted driver, an aristocratic woman, a traveling circus performer, and a group of young people. Together, they explore the beauty of nature and the diversity of human experience.

A Thought Question
"Desire, desire, desire," runs three men's voices. "Desire, desire, desire." The voices repeat and the men's faces turn to each other in a kind of beatific rapture. "Desire," one of the voices says, "is the burning reservoir of energy, the fundamental energy. It has been said that the human being is a reservoir of desire, and that desire is the source of all human activity. Desire is the source of all human movement, and can become the pivot of the soul.""

A three-year-old child, sitting on his mother's lap, watched the men with interest. He seemed to understand the meaning of "desire," and he was fascinated by it. "Desire," he said, "is the fire that burns in the heart, the fire that makes us human."

Voting Is Your Privilege
In a few weeks' time, we shall have to make our decisions for the future of our college. We must consider the importance of our vote and the consequences of our choices. We must remember that our vote is our right, and that it is our duty to exercise it responsibly.

Santa Claus Didn’t Remember Jessie

It was over two weeks since Christmas, and people were still talking about what Santa Claus got them. Some were happy, but others weren’t too excited. That made Jessie pretty worried.

Our editorial page asked how should we handle the issues of the Christmas present. Our readers were in agreement that we should focus on the message of Christmas and not let ourselves get caught up in the commercialism. We want to return to the true meaning of Christmas and not let the commercial aspect ruin our experience.

Letter To Mom
Dear Mom,

I was glad you phoned me last night, but I don’t see what you got so excited about, Goof, mom, what if I haven’t written. My how could I have been writing? I’ve been busy studying and I thought that’s what you wanted, since you didn’t seem to appreciate my grades last quarter.

You just don’t realize how much I’ve been studying lately. Why only yesterday, I spent three hours in the library. Good, huh?

I have a wonderful new attitude, Goof, mom, she’s the best housekeeper I’ve ever seen. I won a game yesterday. By the way, we made one speak and we want to know what the topic would be.

Have you seen the new copy of the College Belle magazine? It’s got some good articles in it. I read it yesterday in the library. There was a new recipe for ended chipped steak with spaghetti and limburger cheese.

I went to the Student Union today and didn’t have any mail. But I bought some new stationery and a sandwich. Goof, that sandwich was good, too.

By the way, in the library yesterday I met Elba Teitel. You remember her, you know, she’s a senior and very in intellectual. We discussed bridge and books we’ve read. She came over and played with us last night.

Well, mom, please write and send $10.00, I don’t know where you got the money to. I try to be careful, but books are so high.

Love,

Alma Maler
By Barbara Thompson

Early in the year, the opinions of our columnists are their own and this letter to the editor is no exception. The writer of this article, however, expresses truly this opinion of the columnists.

There was a school. It was a small school but a good one, and students there were proud for if they had not one thing they had another, such as:

If they had not en- they had honor and sportsmanship and neat uniforms. If they sometimes felt the lack of outside stimuli, there were clubs and clubs and clubs right there. Indeed, if they were often ignorant of the newer poetry and politics and current events, it was a quiet and delightful Southern ignorance, unmarked.

It is true that in this school the budget sometimes failed to meet the grade. If that’s the place, it’s true that occasionally fees had to be increased in consequence of which a few of said students were forced to drop out. It is true that these remained a monstrous bit of shame. But they were proud, for they understood how things were, expensive, and all.

And while in the wider roof might leak and wind might whistle in, while the plates might be prone to fall, and the babies while the floor boards might creak in death, they were seen and played with us last night.

Well, mom, please write and send $10.00. I don’t know where you got the money to. I try to be careful, but books are so high.

Love,
