A Fable Of GSCW

Once in a certain year at GSCW there was a group of very versatile girl students who were far from being dull. One of them was Peggie, a girl with sparkling eyes and a quick wit. She was always looking for new ways to test the imagination of her fellow students. One day, Peggie decided to organize a story-telling competition. The rules were simple: each participant had to tell a story that was based on a single word. The word was to be chosen randomly from a list of possible words.

The word chosen was "fable" and Peggie's challenge was to create a story that was both entertaining and thought-provoking. Here is the story she told:

Dear Editor:

From the back of this letter and the party on the right side of the page, one could really think that we are speaking to you. Really, we are not. We believe that you are one of the most fortunate students of the world. We are not in the least interesting and we are not talking to ourselves.

We think it very easy to have a student to be held in preparation for a particular kind of man and that they have to be the best possible. In fact, so much stress is put on the choice that we would like to be included in the list of very lucky students. The very few words of this letter are addressed to you.

We don't have the ability or the inclination to satisfy everyone, but we do our best to be the best possible. Your constant kindness to us is both shocking and astonishing. Our story will be too short.

We can't help being reminded that stories are the basis of all stories. The most beautiful stories are those that are based on the beauty of the human soul. The best and the worst stories are those that are based on the beauty of the human soul. The best and the worst stories are the ones that are based on the beauty of the human soul.

The story is told in a way that is as natural and as thought-provoking as possible. It is a story that is based on the beauty of the human soul.

Sincerely,

Bette Daniels, Barbee Vevers, and Minnie Able
