Art Students Plan, Put Up Exhibit; Yokko, Dzirkalis In State Show

Three classes of the Woman's College of Georgia, under the direction of Dr. Max Noah, presented the classic opera "Didro and Aeneas," by Henry Purcell in Porter Auditorium, on Friday, May 18, at 8:15 p.m. There was no admission charge. Miss Lucy Underwood accompanied the choir. Solos included Quillian White as Didro, Queen of Carthage, Majoree Dolb as Dido, Lady in Waiting, James McVay as the seeress, Ruth Sanders as the first witch, Max Doulas as the second witch, James Callahan as Aeneas, a Trojan prince, and Dianne Roberts as a sailor.
The opera, first performed in 1669, is considered to be the first English opera ever performed. Although supposed to be a dramatic production, the Choir presented it in concert form.
The opera is in three acts. The plot opens with Didro confessing her love for Aeneas, who during his flight from Troy, is in pursuit of a new empire. The scene changes and Didro's doom is prophesied. But all's well that ends well. Activity will be booming when former members of the A Cappella Choir return to TWC for the weekend.
Saturday morning the alumni will be entertained —with a picnic at Bonner Park. At those three o'clock the same afternoon they will hear Dr. George Beieswanger speak at the choir induction service for new members. Vera Scarbrough, president of the choir, will be presented the "A" Pearl Guard; those who have been in the choir for the past three years will also receive pins.
Saturday night the scene will be the annual banquet at Peabody cafe --tea. Former members will be recognized and the choir diary, which is a description of the past year's events, will be read. The gavel will then be presented to Frances Lyle who is incoming president.

"Are Colleges Killing Education?"

Asks Atlantic Article: Students And Faculty Discuss Killing And Wonder

In the May Atlantic, there was an article by C. B. Curlis, Jr. titled "Are Colleges Killing Education?" Curlis, a former Atlantic editor and a professor at the University of California, Berkeley, argued that colleges are failing to educate students effectively. He claimed that many students are not learning the skills they need to succeed in the real world.

The article sparked a debate among students and faculty members. Some argued that Curlis was right and that colleges need to make fundamental changes. Others disagreed, saying that Curlis was overreacting and that colleges were doing a good job.

It's that "bicycle-built-for-two" time again. Unless you are fortunate enough to own a two-gal-hike, however, riding double may be pretty dangerous. We want to give our kiddies a ride to the nearest dorm but we must remember that when we risk riding double we also risk two lives.

T. National Safety Comm. reports a great majority of deaths each year are due to bicycle accidents on not only deaths of children, but deaths of teens-agers as well. It has been observed that we are not as careful as we should be with our bicycles. Just reading and observing these elementary rules should remind us to be more careful when we ride our bikes.

1. Obey all traffic signs and rules. 2. Keep to the right. In towns, stay close to curb. 3. Keep bicycle under control at all times. 4. Don't stop or park on paved portion of highway. 5. Come to full stop before entering main streets and highways. 6. Don't pass another vehicle until you can see that the way ahead is clear for a safe distance.
