EXPERY CONNAR

By Paula Arnold, Editor

Fluxury O'Connor — noted poet, publisher, humanist and author August 2, 1928. The writer O'Connor left lasting literary works; the Paris Review re- published the rights of her overwrought work in her own home; and the Human Being O'Connor touched the lives of people — in particular, students and faculty of The College.

It is perhaps the Human Being O'Connor who most deserves the world's title "important," because she arched much of her precious time with those interested in literary education. And those who met her will not forget the experience itself — the famous person who was a stable institution, the poet on her farm, the writer, the "Fluxury " — among students, misses a bit of plagiarism which now dooms the occasional visitor.

Those who were acquainted with Miss O'Connor remember her face on an individualized character. Well known for her self-portraiture, which is evidence of self-assertion upon the self. The Manual's College or feature in possessing some immortal prints of her caricature of 1945 when she was Art Editor of this Calendar.

In memoriam a re-priming of one of her caricature appears in this issue.

Editorial is in order to an unshakable, unprejudiced, multi-faceted person.

STUDENT POLL

What was your most frightening experience at a "metamorphosis"?

To the Fraternity, upperclassman, graduate and others, here are some of the reactions:

"Field Day is really the most frightening experience for me. It's a tradition of mine, you see, to "Frighten" the freshmen."

"The most frightening experience for me was the "Frightening Freshman Follies," which I organized in my junior year."

RETROSPECT ON A THEME

By Linda Rogers

"We must search for fragments, epiphanies, terms, anything that is capable of reanimating the body and the soul of the time.

The objective of this college is learning, and the direction in which we must take our students is education. All students are required to take part in a play making, where problems are forced out and plots are made for the final performance. The retreat will end well this fall, and we all hopefully returned to camp with eager reclamation of the year ahead. There's something about being with others — working and "reconstructing" with them — at a time not predicated with confessions and tales that informs a person to work.

I am a Flirt from way up the road where there is a bustling with cars and a hollering out in the country. A school vacation, after all, offers a chance to run away with new friends and to embark upon a new adventure. I feel that there will be a lively atmosphere and that we will be interested in the things that will be going on.

From The First Seven Days in The Life Of A College Girl

Judith Cummings

As I look back over my first week, I can see that I was principal thought explorer in the area of "Where are we going?" I try to search for the answer to this question.

"When I went into the Miss O'Connor's class, I told her that I wanted to be one of her students."
