"Arts" Theme For Alumnae Day

"Another Look at The Arts" will be the over-all theme when The Woman's College of Georgia celebrates Alumnae Day on Saturday, April 30 in Milledgeville.

Following the custom of holding special classes for the returning alumnae, one class in poetry will be taught by Miss Mary Thomas Maxwell and one in music appreciation by Dr. Allen B. Skei.

Preceding the alumnae council meeting the dance and music departments will give a program demonstrating some of the works and activities of these two departments.

On display will be arts works of alumnae, and during the weekend a painting by Kate Myrick Lowery will be given to the Mamie Padgett collection.

A campus tour guided by students of the college has been planned for the day.

During the assembly the reunion classes will be recognized. Among these are the class of 1916, which will be celebrating its golden anniversary, and the class of 1965, which will be celebrating its first reunion.

The speaker at the assembly program will be Dr. Robert E. Lee, president of the Woman's College. Other features will include the presentation of awards and the presentation of the alumnae scholarships.

A reception has been planned for Saturday afternoon, and many of the classes are planning class dinners or meetings. A new event this year will be a golf tournament at the country club. All alumnae are invited to play in the tournament.

JA Program Begins Fall Quarter

The junior advisors, recently elected by the sophomore class, will begin their duties fall quarter 1967, and introduce several innovations, according to Martha Prieto, CGA vice-president.

The major innovation is that junior advisors will line in the freshman dorms—Bell, Beeson, and Terrell Proper, during all of fall quarter.

According to Martha, the junior advisors are already preparing for the coming year. Selected committees are planning prospective projects in which freshmen will be "not merely spectators but participants."

Another area of the program that will be strengthened during the fall session is "team work" among the junior advisors, the house directors, and the dean of students.

The program will attempt to provide opportunities for the junior advisors to get to know the girls who will live on their halls in advance and allow the freshman an opportunity to know more about the school program.

Martha added that certain facets of the traditional program were altered in an effort to eliminate the inconveniences unexpectedly caused in past years, especially last year.

Among the 28 junior advisors elected were, as follows:

Cheryl Wade, Janet Payne, Nancy Jay, Dering Hall, Sherry Zeigler, Patsy Crow, Barbara Stewart, Georgia Ann Newman, Laura Casey, Sidney Churchwell.

Judy Cummings, Kay Templeton, Ginger Copeland, Mary Ann Hutchinson, Cindy Richardson, Allie Mae McLendon, Betty Brown, Doris Cason, Mary Moore.

Jean Johnson, Kathy McDonald, Libba Price, Joyce Darden, Carolyn Maddon, Nancy Waters, Carol Andrews, Liz Mann, Karen Caldwell.

The six alternates chosen were, as follows:

Jackie Usry, Ann Robinette, Lyla Osmundsen, Ann Ethredge, Lois Bradley, and Gail Walker.

FULL YEAR FOR PSYCHOLOGY CLUB

At the last meeting of the Psychology Club the officers for 66-67 were elected. Those elected were president Kay Young; vice-president, Jo Ann Blackmon; Secretary-treasurer, Norma Farmer. A summary of fall and winter activities of the club were reviewed at this time.

As a research project for this year the Psychology Club made a study of leadership on this campus. Other activities this year included a trip to Columbus made by the senior psychology majors on which they toured the Bradley Clinic, the Child Guidance Center, Muskokee County Detention Home, and also attended an afternoon session of the juvenile court. Also club officers, Jeanie Wilson, Edna Taylor, and Ofelia Guernica attended the annual meeting of the

As We See It

Have you noticed the attractive "pig paths" that grace various places on campus? One of the loveliest is to be found running across the archers range in front of Parks Hall. Its location is ideal, being easily seen by visitors to the college, and daily meeting the eyes of the college administrators and teachers who work in Parks.

Another striking area--too large to be called a path--is found in front of Atkinson dining hall. A few patches of grass are seen growing here and there, but the ruddy Georgia clay really catches the eye. This picturesque scene has been afforded us by a long line of senior classes, tramping to and from Ennis.

In addition to other such spots of beauty on campus, the "lawn" of Wells dormitory now begins to bear the traditional pig paths. Getting grass to grow there is a hard enough task in itself, and if the Wellsites continue to cut across the yard, even the clover and wild onions won't stand a chance to survive.

Efforts are now being made to landscape the campus and make it, and the areas around all the dormitories more attractive. These efforts, however, will be futile if we, the students, don't begin using the walkways and stay off the grass. Let's declare pig paths obsolete and make our campus as lovely as it is capable of being.

What Makes a College?

Comments abound on this campus about the "Dullness" at W.C.; the over-all lack of interest; the unfriendliness; how great other schools are; in general, just gripe. No one censures griping for it's necessary to blow off steam in some way.

However, the cause of all this woe is generally attributed to an inanimate, all-powerful creation called "the college" that shoves and pushes us about no matter how we feel about the matter.

Too often students forget that "the college" is not a group of buildings, a set of books, majors and minors, administration, or faculty. A college is the people in it, and the students make it what it is.

There are some things on this campus that students have no ability to affect. However, many things students can have a part in.

Mary Ann Hutchinson

Hutchinson Wins Sibley Scholarship

Mary Ann Hutchinson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J.L. Hutchinson of Dublin, is the 1966-67 recipient of the Martha Erwin Sibley Scholarship, as announced by Dr. Robert E. Lee.

The announcement was made on Honors Day, Wednesday, April 13. Mary Ann was participating in the program as a member of Phi Sigma, a scholastic honor organization for W.C. sophomores.

Mary Ann is getting a double major in English and music. She serves as historian of the I.R.C. and is a member of SAI, Allegro, and the Literary Guild. She will serve as treasurer of C.G.A. during the '66-'67 school year.

The Martha Erwin Sibley Scholarship Fund, endowed by her children in 1963, provides a scholarship for a rising junior based on academic excellence and good citizenship.

Dullness can quickly become excitement when students participate in activities. A smile dispels the air of unfriendliness. If other campuses have a good thing going, it takes only a few energetic souls to start the ball rolling here.

If you don't like something about the W.C. campus, go right ahead and gripe; it will make you feel better. But remember, you are the "campus" and you are responsible for making it an interesting, attractive atmosphere for learning and friendship.
