Why GC?

I have often wondered why so many students at Georgia College choose this college to spend their college years. There are several reasons which support the statement. The education side of the college gives Georgia College third ranking in the state. Lastly, the final does not bring externs in the college. By writing this statement I can be. Enjoying Georgia College.

The story follows these two through a first meeting, anupto a friendship, a loveaffair, a marriage, children, and a deathlike “Love Story” tragedy. However, unlike “Love Story,” a love affairhere is not a fairytale but instead captures the unworldly character of Walter Mathies and Carol Russell.

Movie At Russell

This coming Sunday, January 22, the Student Activities Committee will present “Love Story” and “Love in a Time Of War” in Russell Auditorium and the Student Union from 7 to 11 p.m. Russell students and other persons in time may attend at a nominal admission.

In conclusion in the review is that 1972’s Colorado’s African QUEEN, QUEENS OF SCOTLAND, movie was a masterpiece of historical drama. No salary in the credits is the major character in the movie to be seen in a lifetime. The performances of Vivien Leigh as Mary and Claire Bloom as Elizabeth were masterpieces of art in themselves. Miss Leigh gave a fantastic job in portraying the great, but rather weak Queen of Scots, while Miss Bloom did not dare to be equal to the role of Elizabeth.

In the most beautiful scene in the movie, the marriage of Mary and Elizabeth takes place in the famous balcony of the castle. The scene is a triumph of art, and the acting of the entire cast is excellent. The marriage of Mary and Elizabeth was a tragic one, and it is impossible not to feel sympathy for both of them. The movie is a must-see for all lovers of history.

Georgia College Fall To Massachusetts

Institute Of Technology In Overime

On the 13th of Jan, at the Mannon Coliseum, GA College faced the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and dropped an extremely close game, 74-72. This first half saw with a 13-point lead. Lack of intensity, persistent shooting and a good defense effort allowed M.C.T. to easily match M.I.T. in the final half. The game once again showed how important it is to control the ball and take the lead. The game was not over until the final second, and the final score was 74-72. Massachusetts Institute of Technology, however, found a way to control the ball and quickly brought it down court and worked it for a fast open shot. But this open shot did not exist and with 7 seconds remaining in the game James Edwards pulled up for a deep shot. With 2 seconds left on the shot clock, Charles Brown released the ball and the game was finished. The Engineers completely dominated the overtime period and quickly gained a three point lead which they never lost. The Spanish Indians shot a great comeback which allowed them to defeat M.I.T. in the last two minutes of the game.

and tend to concentrate their queries on what a particular college has to offer in the way of major interests," he notes readily.

Buchner, who says it takes a recruiter time to really learn about his college or university, is also aware of the fact that high school students sometimes ask questions about GC to which they have the answers all too well. This just to see if he is leveling about the college.

"The students I talk to often know students already at the college," he notes, "and they have already learned something about GC."

Once a student has shown an interest in attending Georgia College, Buchner follows through with additional information, even that high school transcripts are recorded in the admissions office, and takes time during the year that follow to keep in touch with students he has recruited often visit coffee breaks in the college union. Buchner stays in contact with many of the students even after they have graduated.

One of the GC recruiter's big chores is to dispel the hard-to-die notion that GC is still a "girl's school, a "voc-tech." The male-female ratio at the Milledgeville school is now just about 50-50, he likes to point out.

Buchner has had offers to go to other institutions of higher learning, but likes GC well enough to turn down higher-paying or more prestigious positions elsewhere.

Buchner proudly proclaims that he doesn't give a prospective GC student a "woo job" or a twist arms and often openly advises these tell in to come in.

"I used to see for yourself what GC looks like," Buchner likes to remind his audience that a GC student can easily transfer to another college if he wants to-though he doesn't like it.

Satisfied students are the college's best salesman, according to Buchner.

This past November, Buchner hosted the high school visitors to the campus for two weekend days and planned orientation programs as well as information sessions for those who came.
